The event entitled “Out and About: Examining Gay Life in Small Town America” is a three-part film series that examines small-town life for members of the LBGT population. Each of the films chronicles the real life experiences of individuals living in small towns in America. Though different in their make-up and focus, each of the films fits within the overarching theme of the challenges that members of the LBGT face in coming to terms with their own sexual nature and the rejection of friends, families, and community members. Further, it examines the ways in which members of the LBGT community deal with this rejection.

V. Event Narrative (up to 4 pages single-spaced)

The goal of this film series is to bring together the members of the gay, bisexual, transgender, and straight communities to enhance the dialog about challenges facing members of the LBGT community in small towns across America. Each of the films is based on real life experiences of members of LBGT communities. The first film, Prayers for Bobby, chronicles the life of Bobby Griffith, a young man who commits suicide due to the religious intolerance of his mother and other community members and his mother’s subsequent activism to reject this intolerance. This film is especially well-timed in light of the recent suicides of several young people across the country. This film is co-sponsored by the Counseling department, and a member of the department will co-facilitate a talk-back session with a member of the social work faculty following the film.

The second film is entitled Out In The Silence. This documentary chronicles the real-life story of a small American town confronting a firestorm of controversy ignited by a same-sex wedding announcement in the local newspaper. It is presented as a way to challenge members of the FSU community to examine their values and help close the gaps in understanding that serve to divide our community. This film will also have a talk-back session that will be co-facilitated by Michelle Richardson and Jes Berndt, M.Ed.

The third film, Small Town Gay Bar, is a documentary that shows how LBGT persons in rural Mississippi create a sense of family and community by driving hundreds of miles each weekend to participate in events at a gay bar operated by two lesbians. In addition to addressing LBGT stereotypes, this film also confronts the stereotypes so frequently attached to southern, rural communities. The talk-back session that will accompany this film will be facilitated by Dr. Michelle Stone.

a. The conceptual framework that explains how the event will augment Ferris’s long-term commitment to diversity and inclusion.

FSU students, faculty, and other employees all participate in day-to-day life at Ferris that provides many opportunities for engaging with individuals from diverse backgrounds. Despite many opportunities for doing so, many people continue to operate within their own “comfort zones.” This film series brings people of diverse backgrounds and ideologies together in a safe and mutually respectful environment with an overarching goal of gaining greater understanding of the challenges facing LBGT members as they live and work in small town America. In doing so, it is the intent of the series to reinforce that FSU is an environment for student learning that is inclusive of and sensitive to a diverse student population.
Consistent with the FSU’s goal of advocating for diversity and inclusion, these films and the accompanying discussion introduce diversity into the broader culture of the University and provide expertise and leadership on diversity and inclusion related issues. They not only address issues of intolerance and discrimination facing members of the LBGT community, they also address these issues in relation to the rural and southern cultures.

b. The goals and intended outcome(s) of the event include:

- Advocating for diversity and inclusion;
- Introducing diversity into the culture of the University;
- Provide expertise and leadership on diversity and inclusion related matters, for example, the challenges facing LBGT students in rural areas, and the impact of intolerance;
- Infusing diversity issues into the broader discussion of discrimination and prejudice

c. A statement on how the event relates to the curriculum or a specific discipline, if appropriate.

This film series is clearly interdisciplinary in its benefit; however, it has particular import for students in criminal justice. As police are often the “gatekeepers” of the criminal justice system, it is imperative that they have a comprehensive understanding of and appreciation for, the diversity of the population with whom they will interact. This understanding is especially significant because the interaction that police have with the LBGT community can either serve to protect them from the victimization they so often experience, or it can serve to re-victimize them. A lack of understanding of, and sensitivity to, the issues concerning the LBGT community can result in disparate treatment at best, and further victimization at worst. For CJ professionals in the fields of probation and parole and victim advocacy, an awareness of, and appreciation for, our differences can result in a greater understanding of “just” responses to LBGT victimization.

e. Description of the target audience, including the estimated number of participants.

This event is open to all individuals, and varying perspectives are encouraged. We anticipate that approximately 600 people will attend.

f. The expected impact that the event will have on Ferris.

It is anticipated that this event will provide a safe and welcoming environment for lively dialog about challenges that LGBT members in small town communities face in their efforts to acknowledge their sexual nature and live productive lives. The events are intended to infuse diversity issues into the broader discussion of discrimination and prejudice with a goal of preparing our students to be active, productive citizens in a diverse society.

g. A specific plan to assess the impact of the event on the University.

This impact of this event will be assessed through evaluations that will be handed out to participants near the conclusion of the event. The evaluations will ask students to rate their level of awareness of issues before and after their viewing of the films. The surveys will use a Likert-type scale that will not only assess levels of awareness, but other issues related to the goals of the project as described above.
